99TH COUNTY FAIR SEPT. 10-14 TO BE OUTSTANDING EVENT

Every indication points to the fact that the 99th annual Oxford County Fair, held on the grounds between Norway and South Paris on Sept. 10-14, will be outstanding. President Stanley M. Wheeler, Secretary Sidney F. Verrill, as well as every member of the board of directors, have literally scoured the country to secure exceptional attractions for the big five day event.

As has been the custom for many years, the officials have practically turned the fair over to the school children of Oxford County on Tuesday, the first day. The children will be admitted free to the grounds and special programs have been arranged for their entertainment. In addition to Young America's Day, the officials have also designated the opening day as 4-H Club Day. Directors and leaders of this organization are planning an interesting program which will be presented in front of the grandstand between the nine-dash racing events scheduled for this big first day.

Wednesday has been set apart in memory of Charles H. George whose death occurred June 28. Special exercises will be held to commemorate Mr. George who was associated with the society for three-quarters of a century.

Governor Barrows has been invited to attend the fair on Thursday, as well as all of the Boy Scouts in the State. A special program is to be presented by the Scouts under the direction of District Commissioner Elmore C. Edmunds, Friday and Saturday will be known as Norway-South Paris Day and Oxford County Day respectively.

The horse and oxen drawing events will bring in competition. —Continued on Page Six

UPTON GRANGE HAS CELEBRATION

The "Painters" of Upton Grange served a supper to the "Electricians" after the regular meeting at the Hall Aug. 26. This was a reward to the "Electricians" for winning the contest which the Grange has been having since the first of May. The winners had a total of 652 points against the losers' 651 points.

Points in the contest were awarded as follows: 5 points for each member attending meetings; 1, each member prompt at meetings; 1-10, each side for participating in program; 35, each application for re-instatement; 50, each application for membership; 5, each quarter that dues were paid; 10, each attempt to earn money; 5, each dollar profit made. The Worthy Master acted as scorer and the other 30 members were divided equally.

The contest was a big success in several ways. It aroused interest among several members who had been pulling away from the Grange. Three members who had not been to Grange for nearly two years, came to meetings and paid their dues. The Grange Hall has been wired for electricity and will be painted very soon. Two former members have been re-instated and seven candidates are waiting for initiation into the order.

Rev. George Duke of Errol, N. H., was the guest speaker for the occasion. His subject was an article published by E. O. Baker (U. S. Department of Agriculture), "Why I Want My Son to be a Farmer."

While the meeting was a victory meeting, it was also a farewell party for Miss Myrtle Pratt, who plans to move to Massachusetts after her wedding to H. Prescott Tucker on Sept. 1. The Grange will miss Miss Pratt, who has been a loyal worker in our small order. There were 12 members and two visitors present.

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE TO OBTAIN SEPTEMBER MEETING

Because of an overcrowded local calendar early in September, the regular meetings of the Bethel Chamber of Commerce will begin on Tuesday, Oct. 1. This decision has been reached by the officers of the organization after considering a postponement from the customary first Tuesday. The October meeting will as usual be preceded by supper at the American Legion rooms.

BENNETT'S GARAGE TO BE COMPLETED SOON

Work of building Clarence Bennett's new garage, replacing the building lost by fire two weeks ago, began last week after removal of the ruins was completed. The new building will have concrete floors throughout, the front of the structure being on the site of the old garage. However, the new one is considerably larger, being 45x60 feet, and is so designed as to afford twice as much space for the repair shop. An office and small show room will be included, also an entrance to the shop floor from Elm Street.

Of frame construction like its predecessor, the new quarters will be completed by a large crew by the last of next week according to present expectations.

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

A Non-Partisan Editorial Review of the Events of Each Week, Illustrated

EDITOR'S NOTE—When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of the news analyst, and not necessarily of this newspaper.

GREECE:
And Italy

Germany grabbed Czechoslovakia, Austria, Denmark, Norway, Luxembourg, Belgium, Holland and parts of Poland and France. Russia grabbed Estonia, Latvia, Lithuania, and parts of Poland, Finland, and Rumania. Italy grabbed Ethiopia, pounced on republican Spain, and swallowed Albania.

Italy was on the move again. This time against Greece. Poor Greece had done nothing but shiver since the war began. Its dictator,

PRESIDENT METAXAS
Neither pro-British nor pro-German.

General Metaxas, was neither pro-British, nor pro-German. He was just plain pro-Metaxas. But Albania and Greece have a common borderline. There was an insignificant incident over the Greek handling of an Albanian bandit; Albania always is bandit-infested. The "kept" Italian press went into a roar, and demanded satisfaction. Just as reds said the Finns threatened Russia, so the Fascists said the ferocious, insidious Greeks were threatening the modern Roman empire of Signor Mussolini.

Tough?

With the Greek bases in Italian hands, it would be very tough for England in the eastern Mediterranean region. The British fleet, thereabouts, is based on Alexandria, Egypt, and much of it might have to be withdrawn. That would help the Italian threat to Egypt and its Suez canal, with the Italian legions advancing out of Mussolini's North African Libya. Italy-in-Greece would also annoy Asia Minor, Turkey, and British Palestine, where John Bull's battleships get their fuel oil, at Haifa. The Bulgarians also claim a piece of Greek territory, which they lost after the last World war. Everybody conceded it was a bad, bad year for the little fellows, as a Greek warship was sunk in port by an "unknown" submarine.

COLONIES:

First Loss

Britain lost the first of her colonial possessions in the current war to Italy as two divisions of Mussolini's crack troops (about 20,000 men) succeeded in driving out 1,200 Tommies from Berbera, capital of British Somaliland. Loss of the African colony itself wasn't worrying Great Britain a great deal for Somaliland has never added materially to the wealth of the empire.

But what did concern the British high command was that with this loss of territory Italy had gained ground in her attempt to wrest control of the Suez canal and thus sever British empire communications.

For the British there was only one ray of light in their abandonment of Somaliland: as in the retreat at Dunkirk, the troops left the battlefield fighting a furious rear guard action, destroying everything that could not be saved and forcing Italy to pay as dear a price as possible for her victory.

II GERMAN WAR:

Aviation

The aerial warfare over England continued with a bang. The German flying losses were considerably heavier than the British, for a reason. The Germans were taking the offensive, and had to encounter anti-aircraft fire, as well as the defending British planes. But the German air supremacy was something like 3 to 1, and Air Marshal Goering was reckoning on a certain given expenditure of men and machines to achieve certain given results.

The German pilots were very young, some of them 15 or 18 years old, actually. They dive-bombed and fought like madmen, fanatical, furious. The royal air force pilots were a different type: older, more experienced, many of them soldiers of fortune, or old-time professionals. A high percentage were Irish, Canadian, or American—types that make better flyers than the native English, said the military men.

The Germans had two disadvantages. The "British" regulars were far better, man for man, than the German kids. And the British planes were far better, ship for ship, than the German crates. The German aircraft were slapped together by mass production, and at any given time, about 60 per cent of them were in the repair shop. The British machines, more carefully constructed, sent only 25 per cent to the shops, at any given time. But the Germans had 25,000 trained pilots, while the British had less than 9,000. The catch there was this:

Pilots can only fly two days per week, and keep in decent shape. Hence, you need three pilots per plane. The Germans have this ratio; the British do not. The German losses were exceedingly heavy, but that was exactly what Goering expected and arranged for, and his idea was to gradually exterminate the royal air force by a steady policy of military attrition. Whether any country could actually be subjugated from the air, remained to be seen. Goering thought so; Churchill did not.

The Germans had developed a so-called "flying pencil," which was in reality a new Dornier bomber. It could rise fast, in an unusually steep ascent, while it could swoop down to a "few yards" from the ground, when it "appeared to suddenly stand still in the air." While it "stood" still, it dropped its "eggs." So the story went. This flying pencil seemed to worry the Irish, Canadian, and American hearties of the royal air corps considerably. Many of them had fought as adventurers in Spain, but the poor Spaniards never had anything like that, they grumbled. Meanwhile, Switzerland protested vigorously to London, as the R. A. F. kept soaring over neutral Swiss territory, on its way to "egging" Turin and Milan, the industrial centers of north Italy, where Fiat and Isotta manufacture their aerial goods.

WILKIE:

Talkie-Talkie

A challenge to President Roosevelt to meet him in a series of platform debates on the issues of the 1940 campaign, highlighted the acceptance speech of Republican presidential candidate, Wendell Willkie, as he addressed an Elwood, Indiana, crowd of between 150,000 and 200,000 persons.

The G. O. P. standard bearer endorsed "selective military service" (conscription) and came out for material aid to Great Britain in that country's struggle against Nazi Germany. Willkie charged that the present administration had failed in its program of economic rehabilitation and has been courting war by dabbling in foreign politics.

Even his sternest critics were forced to admit, however, that was none of the "appeaser" in the man behind such words as these: "We must not shirk the necessity of preparing our sons to take care of themselves in case the defense of America leads to war" . . . and again . . . "We must face a brutal, perhaps a terrible, fact. Our way of life is in competition with Hitler's way of life. I promise to outdistance Hitler in any contest he chooses, in 1940 or after. And I promise that when we beat him, we shall beat him on our own terms, in our own American way."

Republicans hailed the speech as a masterpiece and saw in it the beginning of a campaign that would definitely result in victory for their candidate. Democrats saw in the speech an endorsement of many of the reforms the New Deal has been advocating and thought Mr. Willkie wanted only a change in personnel—not policy—to carry such reforms.

WENDELL L. WILKIE

"I Accept."

At any rate it marked the real beginning of what looks like the hardest fought presidential contest thus far in the Twentieth century.

THE LEAGUE:

What's Left

The League of Nations was bunched out of Geneva some time back, and went to France. From there, it moved on to Portugal, where it thought of staying. But the Spaniards and Germans may yet invade Portugal. So the ghost went west, just like in the movie. The economic and financial sections of the league secretariat pounced on Princeton university, which was always strongly anti-league in feeling, even though Woodrow Wilson was a former Princetonian president. But the latest was this: The excellent international labor office of the league selected McGill university at Montreal, Canada, for its hideaway. The Yankee John Winant, formerly the able and progressive governor of New Hampshire, is director of the labor office. He thanked McGill by wire.

DEFENSE:

First Round

When it came to mobilizing the National Guard for a year of training, the house followed the example of the senate. The house finally voted for the callup, by a landslide of 342 to 33. The senate vote was 71 to 7. There are 380,000 National Guardsmen. They are to get the works for 12 months, and can be sent anywhere in the Western hemisphere, or the Philippine islands—which is a long way away from the Western hemisphere. Youngsters under 18 were to be discharged from the guard at once, and married guardsmen were permitted to resign within three weeks.

Mr. Roosevelt, who had a goodly share of the American press against him in his campaign for a third term, had none the less won the first round in his campaign for a general mobilization. His program called for no less than $10,000,000,000. The second round was the much-contested Burke-Wadsworth conscription bill, which would call up 12,000,000 men, between the ages of 21 and 31. They, too, would get a year's training, if the bill went through. It was opposed by a complete cross-section, ranging from experienced military critics and regular officers to the Woman's Christian Temperance Union and many patriotic isolationists. Apparently to speed things up, War Secretary Stimson had said England might not last a month. Naval Secretary Knox said England might not hold out for 60 days.

Chrysler

Meanwhile, the Chrysler corporation got $53,500,000 to erect a mass-production tank factory and pay for mass-production tanks. The plant was to be set up in the Detroit area and was to start production within 13 months. The tanks produced will be "medium" 25-tonners. About 5,000 men will be employed. Some observers thought the proposed plant was too near the Canadian border, unless the Canadian border was to be obliterated.

Sad News

But later came sad news for the House of Chrysler. Its head, Walter P. Chrysler Sr., died of a cerebral hemorrhage, after an illness of more than two years. Sixty-five years old, the automobile manufacturer who started his career as an apprentice machinist at seven cents an hour, was reported to be "the most insured man in the world." In 1931 it was said he had taken out $12,000,000 in insurance policies. Chrysler had not taken an active role in business affairs since 1938.

LUXEMBURG:

No More

Luxemburg is known to Americans by the melodious strains of the waltzing "Count of Luxemburg." It was a tiny grand duchy, wedged between Germany and France and

BLESSINGS:
Of Warfare

One English farmer blessed the good old war, and especially the Blitzkrieg features. This agriculturist had two chickens killed by a German aerial bomb. But he had a romantic and patriotic neighbor. She wanted those chickens to have them stuffed as war souvenirs. She paid the farmer 10 pounds for one of them, and 5 pounds for the other. This totaled just $60.30 in American money. The pound is now worth about 4.02 in your Uncle Sam's marmoset.

Belgium. It got invaded in 1914, and again in 1940. Neither time did it fight. It is rich in iron, and in iron works. The Luxembourgish royal family, cousins of the so-so Hapsburgs, fled to this country not long ago.

Before the last war, Luxemburg was independent, but in customs union with Germany. After 1918, it went into customs union with Belgium, instead. Now, it has been re-annexed to Germany, along with the little Belgian districts of Eupen and Malmedy, which the Belgians had grabbed from Germany in 1919. Neighboring Alsace-Lorraine, German from 1870 to 1918, has also been re-incorporated in the German reich. Meanwhile, America is filled with swarms of royal Luxembourgish children. Mr. Roosevelt has sent the U. S. S. Trenton after them.

NIGHT CLUBS:

In n. y.

Big news from the modern Babylon. All the New York nightclub people were to be fingerprinted, and high time, too. This included the capitalists, their sub-proletarians, the glamour girls, comedians, doormen, waiters, hatches, kowtow dolls and cigars and cigarettes.

The reason for this drastic step seemed to be that nightclubs and robberies were (said the police) closely connected. They "printed" the ritzlet in the game, as well as the more sordid types. Some of the nightclubbers liked the idea, but others raised a big yowl.

NAMES in the news . . .

NELSON ROCKEFELLER

¶ Nelson Rockefeller, son of John D. Jr., got a government job at $1 per year. Mr. Roosevelt appointed him "co-ordinator of commercial and cultural relations among the American republics for the Council of National Defense." In addition, the young man will be "chairman of the inter-departmental committee on inter-American affairs." Young Rockefeller is interested in a hotel at Caracas, Venezuela.

¶ Air Marshal Goering got himself the very newest of new uniforms.

It is different from all else: a silver-gray ensemble. His baton is extra-size, with a big apple at the tip.

¶ Bruce Lockhart, the smart rascal who wrote the smart "British Agent," was appointed British ambassador to Czechoslovakia—that is, Czechoslovakia-in-England. Prince Roger Starhemberg, who used to be one of Hitler's hearties, once owned 30 castles in Austria. He fled to France, then to England, and joined the French army-in-England.

¶ Queen Elizabeth of England told Caroline Haslett, president of the British woman's engineering society, "I think the work is so interesting that I should like to take a course in engineering myself. And what is more, I really believe I could manage the work." The little queen is Scotch, and virtually all British engineers are the same.

¶ The name of a very well-known luxury-liner, of 16,000 tons, was the Transylvania, out of Glasgow. It was sunk by a German submarine: 30 lost, 300 safe. Your correspondent took it to Cuba in happier days.

¶ The French guillotine expert is Monsieur Paris. But he's in Paris, under the German occupation. So the Petain Vichy government sent to Algeria for another guillotine headroller. He arrived in good shape. His name is Monsieur Alglers. He got to work at once and chopped up a young criminal.

STRAIGHT FROM THE SHOULDER NEWS OF THE NATIONAL CAPITAL

Washington Digest

Congressional Attention Focused On National Preparedness Plan

Suggest Investigation of Progress Made; Roosevelt Takes Personal Charge of Defense Program; Army Leaders Prepare for Draft.

By G. F.
(Released by Western Newspaper Union.)

WASHINGTON.—Congress is annoyed by slow motion in the national defense program.

The war department recently reported to a joint committee of the house and senate that although approximately $400,000,000 had been appropriated in June for army airplanes, engines and accessories, actual contracts had been signed for only 33 planes.

The appropriation bills provided funds for 4,000 planes, but seven weeks later only 33 planes actually were under contract—and those will not be delivered before January or February, 1941.

In the same hearing, the national defense commission reported that the army would not have full equipment for 750,000 men before 1942.

Inasmuch as congress has appropriated and authorized $14,000,000,000 for national defense since January, 1940, members of the house and senate are pressing for a thorough investigation of the preparedness slow-down.

Some leaders favor establishment of a joint committee of the house and senate to conduct a continuing "audit" of the defense contracts. Such an arrangement would keep congress fully abreast of new orders.

Capitol Hill has been grumbling sotto voce for several weeks over reports of confusion and conflict in the military departments. Whatever the cause, heavy defense equipment is not yet being produced in any considerable quantity. This applies particularly to long-range guns for the coast artillery, heavy naval guns, land tanks, and long-range bombing planes. Congress is determined to find the bottleneck.

One source of friction has been located in the procurement division of the treasury department, which long has been the general purchasing agency for the government. Secretary Morgenthau feels his department should continue to place the contracts. On the other hand, the army and the navy insist they should place their own orders for highly specialized equipment. Third, the new defense commission feel they should place all orders for equipment not heretofore purchased by the government.

In this scramble many orders are falling between the three contending authorities, or being delayed by departmental red-tape.

Secretary Morgenthau has informed congress that out of the $14,000,000,000 now available for defense, not more than $5,000,000,000 could be spent by July 1, 1941, under the present schedule of buying.

American industry has made every effort to get the preparedness wheels turning. Thousands of manufacturers have come to Washington at their own expense to offer their plants to the government. Some have returned home without having conferred with the official sought. Confusion prevails in the purchasing agencies, due to conflicts of authority under the hastily written emergency legislation. The defense commission is now appealing to business managers not to come to Washington, but to wait until they receive inquiries by mail.

President Roosevelt has taken direct personal charge of the entire defense program. Although heavily burdened by acute problems in foreign relations, and a multitude of pressing domestic issues, Mr. Roosevelt wants to give personal approval of every major contract for defense equipment. His long experience as assistant secretary of the navy equipped him with special technical knowledge of fighting seacraft. He is not equally familiar with modern airplanes and army equipment. The whole system of military aviation in the modern sense, has developed since Mr. Roosevelt left the navy department in 1921. Giant tanks and motorized army units likewise are a recent development. Delicate technical problems are involved in all this modern equipment. Some military experts have cautiously expressed the opinion that President Roosevelt should not undertake to deal personally with all these complex technical problems. But their sense of loyalty and patriotism restrains all public criticism of the commander-in-chief.

Opposition to compulsory military service in peace times is rising in many sections of the country. The congressional mail indicates that anti-conscription sentiment is based largely on the general knowledge that supplies, material and equipment are not yet available for a conscript army.

Many critics insist that voluntary enlistments should be given a trial, at least to the point at which surplus military equipment will be available over and above that needed for the present standing army and National Guard.

The wave of anti-conscription mail is making a deep impression upon congressional sentiment. What purpose will be served by registering 12,000,000 young men for compulsory military service when there is no field equipment available for even 750,000 men? So runs the cloak-room discussion on Capitol Hill.

Much opposition to conscription is based upon the fact that compulsory military service has been a favored device of the European dictators.

In ordinary times this hardly would be a valid argument against conscription in the United States. But these are not ordinary times. During the last seven years vast discretionary powers have been delegated to the President by congress. For the most part these powers are all dormant for the time being. But they may be called to active use by a mere presidential proclamation.

They Call It POLITICS

By CARTER FIELD
(Bell Syndicate—WNU Service.)

WASHINGTON.—The question is repeatedly asked: "Does the President know something he cannot tell?" Meaning, of course, whether Mr. Roosevelt knows of some specific threat to the United States which is responsible for the feverish activity to get this country "prepared."

Certainly the President has had a lot of reports which he has not stated publicly.

For instance, it was the conviction of the military intelligence of the U. S. army up to about a month ago that the Germans would win the "Battle of Britain" and would win it within "four weeks" from the time the Nazis started.

Since then military intelligence has revised its views sharply. The revision has been due to two factors. One is that the British air fighting has surprised the world. For a considerable period of time, AFTER the French collapse and carrying through to the last reports as this is written, the British had been losing only about one plane to four for the Germans.

This is not enough to whittle the Germans "down to size," or to give the British a sporting chance against the Nazi air armadas. But it has changed the picture tremendously for opinions as to a "four-week conquest."

This "information," at the time it was believed by military intelligence, was not made public because it was only an opinion.

The President has also heard some gloomy forecasts from a certain naval source. The real point of all this is that the President was more pessimistic, and hence more convinced of the necessity of SPEEDY preparedness on the part of this country, than he had the right to explain to the country.

Why, it might be asked, should a forecast of quick British defeat have worried the President so far as THIS country is concerned?

Because the President is much worried about what the Nazis will do if they conquer Britain. For instance, there is the Caribbean, where a victorious Germany might attempt to seize possessions of the conquered, possessions which would make magnificent air bases for eventual attack on the Panama canal or the U. S. itself. For instance, in some Latin American countries there are tremendous German and Italian populations.

Star Dust STAGE-SCREEN-RADIO

By VIRGINIA VALE
(Released by Western Newspaper Union.)

HERBERT MARSHALL'S first talking picture was "The Letter," in which he played Jeanne Eagel's lover, whom she killed. Now he's playing in it again, but this time he's the husband of the heroine, played by Bette Davis. He prefers his current role.

"I'd rather be a betrayed, but live, husband, than a dead lover!" he commented.

Incidentally, two of the most interesting photographs that have come this way recently are of Bette Davis and her stand-in. They're dressed alike, posed alike. If anything, the stand-in is a little prettier than the talented Bette, but she suffers sadly by contrast. Those photographs show the difference between an expert and an amateur, and they're worthy of any girl's careful study.

According to Ray Milland, "The greatest gift an actor can get is a chance to play with Claudette Colbert."

Here's the record that proves it. One of Milland's first pictures was "The Gilded Lily," made six years ago; it gave him a good start toward his present success. A young man named Fred MacMurray got his start in that picture, too; he was so scared that he shook when he was making tests, and Miss Colbert kidded him out of his panic.

Melvyn Douglas was a polite but sinister "heavy" until he worked opposite her in "She Married Her Boss" and surprised everybody but himself by proving to be an excellent light comedian. "I Met Him in Paris" gave the public another light comedian, Robert Young, who until then had been a serious young man on the screen. Clark Gable had been slipping at the box office until he and the charming Claudette made the hilarious "It Happened One Night."

A giant gorilla has been worrying the executives of the zoo at Bristol, England; it costs $48 a day to feed him, and they feared that they'd have to destroy him to save his rations.

A giant gorilla has also been worrying Producer Jack Moss of Paramount—he needed one for "D. O. A." (Dead on Arrival) a mystery thriller featuring Ellen Drew, Rod Cameron, and various others. He's cabled to Bristol to ask how much he'd have to pay for Alfred, the gorilla, and what could be done about transporting him with a trailer to this country. Seems that Hollywood zoos can't offer anything big and scary enough to suit his purpose.

Cleaning Pewter.
QUESTION: How is pewter cleaned and polished?

Answer—Immerse the pewter in a solution of one-third cup of lye in two quarts of water. After three hours the dinginess will begin to loosen, and can be rubbed off. In very bad cases, much longer immersion is necessary, but in that event a fresh solution should be used every six or eight hours. The pewter should be watched and kept in the solution no longer than necessary. The immersion should be complete. Any part out of the solution will form a line, which cannot be eradicated. Wood handles should be taken off or kept out of the solution. After removal from the solution, rinse the article with plenty of clear water. To brighten the metal use a good quality metal polish as soon as possible after cleaning. Because of the corrosive effect of lye, wear rubber gloves and avoid spattering the solution.

Cod Liver Oil Stains.
Question: How can cod liver oil stains be removed from cotton goods?

Answer: When fresh, cod liver oil stains can be taken out with carbon tetrachloride. Place the stained part over a thick pad of cloth and apply carbon tetrachloride liberally. The pad will absorb the oil as it is dissolved. With the carbon tetrachloride still in the cloth, wash with soap and water. Another remedy is to rub the stain with a mixture of 1 tablespoon soap flakes and 2 tablespoons of boiling water, with 2 tablespoons amyl acetate added after the soap and water mixture begins to thicken. Rub well, and after the stain has been rubbed away, wash with warm suds. When cod liver oil stains have been laundered, they become set, and the brown stain is almost impossible to remove.

Cracked Wallpaper.
Question: A chimney goes up the wall of a bedroom, and wallpaper always cracks in the corners. In repapering the rooms, how can we prevent this?

Answer: That cracking may be due either to the settling of the chimney or to expansion and contraction with changes of temperature. One cure is to put quarter-round moulding in the corners, nailed to the wall only, these mouldings to be painted with the trim in the room. Another idea is to bring the wallpaper on the wall only up to the chimney, while wallpaper on the chimney is brought only to the wall; in other words, the paper does not go across the corners.

Selling Old Furniture.
Question: I have a lot of furniture over 80 years old. The woodwork is perfect; not scratched or marred, although the upholstery is somewhat affected by age. I would like to sell it. I know there are people who would buy such furniture, but in our town we could not get much of a price. Can you make any suggestions?

Answer: Your best move will be to take photographs of the different pieces to show design and details as clearly as possible, and to send these to antique dealers in nearby large cities. It would be a stroke of luck for you to get into contact with a purchaser; your best chance is to work through dealers.

Grease on Flagstone.
Question: Tell me how to remove grease from bluestone flagging. I have tried soda and water, but would like better results. Sometimes this solution leaves large white spots. How do I remove the white from the soda?

Answer: Make a paste of hydrated lime and a half and half mixture of benzene and carbon tetrachloride. Put this on the stain at least an inch thick, then cover with canvas to check evaporation. Scrubbing with washing soda and hot water, followed by thorough rinsing with clear water will also remove grease, and should not leave white spots.

Army Engages in Nationwide 'Blitzkrieg' Games

Greatest nationwide 'peacetime' maneuvers in history are mobilizing 310,000 members of the regular army, the National Guard and the reserve in the East, South, Middle West and West. Uncle Sam's fighting forces are being trained in the latest technique of blitzkrieg warfare. Above are shown typical scenes occurring daily in the war games.

Modern Weapon

Because of an equipment shortage, soldiers participating in the St. Lawrence county, N. Y., war games have to use "war weapons" that are weapons in name only. Sgt. Edward Reville swings into action with a beer can barrage.

Old Dobbin Takes a Dip

Maybe it was the heat—but whatever caused it, this horse just couldn't resist the waters of New York's East River so over he went, from one of the city's piers. Police, firemen, department of sanitation men, men from the Society for Prevention of Cruelty to Animals and numerous volunteers had to co-operate before Dobbin was brought to shore.

Baby Robins Sing for Their Breakfast

It's mighty convenient when a picture flies right into the hands of a cameraman. That was the experience of a photographer in Baltimore who took the above views of a Robin family. The birds built their nest in his yard and he was able to snap the parent bird, left, looking anxiously to see if the other parent is on the job digging up worms. At right, papa has just returned, his beak full of worms for the babies who are mighty hungry. He'll dole them out evenly.

Grandmas Deride New Beach Styles

Government Registers Aliens

More than 3,500,000 aliens residing in the United States began registering with federal authorities throughout the country on Tuesday August 27. The registration period will require four months to complete. Every alien will be fingerprinted and required to answer a questionnaire to test his attitude toward American institutions. Above is shown a registration form and a scene in a federal court room in which aliens are swearing allegiance to the United States. Aliens are assured there is absolutely no stigma attached to being fingerprinted. No person need be ashamed of being registered.

MR. HOOVER'S MISTAKES

(from a Chicago newspaper)
You probably have never seen a copy of the Wallace [Idaho] Miner.
We hadn't until a friend brought it to our attention and we discovered a gem of an editorial about Mr. Hoover. Here it is:

"An inspired piece from one of the New Deal propagandists says that 'Hoover was a complete failure.' So he was. He failed in a lot of things. He failed to draw out his salary of $75,000 a year while he was President, turning it all back into the treasury. He failed to have his sons organize insurance company firms to write insurance on government enterprises. He built a Rapidan resort for fishing and recreation at his own expense and gave it to the government. None of his sons went racing through the divorce courts to the disillusionment of the public. He never bundled up a lot of government documents to sell as a book to the faithful at a huge profit to himself and he never sold himself into political slavery to a labor organization for a $500,000 campaign fund. He gathered a marvelous collection of war stuff and built a museum for it, but failed to ask congress to pay the bill he paid it himself.

"He did not preach class hatred,
nor try to pack the Supreme court.
He did not plow up every third row of cotton and he did not pretend the American people one thing while at the same moment doing everything to accomplish the directly opposite result.

"He did not ask congress to assassin the taxpayers a billion dollars every time someone shot off a firecracker in Europe and he did not go on fishing trips on government warships accompanied by a fleet of destroyers. Neither did he kill off all the farmers' little pigs or encourage the importation of Argentine beef. In fact, there are a lot of foolish things that Hoover didn't do that some other people have done. There are a lot of constructive things that he could have done if he had not had the opposition of a Democratic congress but anyway, he did not leave the American people $47 million less in debt."

DESTINY... FOR AMERICA...

Reading history... hearing the stories handed down to your own family... listening on the radio to episodes from our past... have you ever wondered why we built this country so fast?

Only a little more than a century and a half since we became a nation! Only 300 years since all there was of it were those few precarious settlements on the Atlantic seaboard!

And now? We are the greatest nation in the world with power to lead that world, if we choose!

Have you ever felt that back of the urge which brought people to this country was something more than personal ambition? A great plan—perhaps—that caught them up in its unfolding so that they were eager to cross the ocean when it was six weeks wide, and dangerous; so that they were determined to go West, generation after generation until there were no more frontiers? Have you ever wondered why women as well as men, were possessed with such a love for land of their own that nothing mattered but gratifying it?
Not drudgery, not danger, not loneliness.

Have you ever wondered why even the climate of this new world in for the most part more stimulating than that of the old so that men are necessarily active and intolerant of idleness? Have you ever thought that we are set apart between two great oceans or wonder why we have been so inventive and skillful with machinery?

Today, as the old world seems to be destroying itself, the need for a strong, new world, equipped by Nature and her own self-elected people for complete self sufficiency is apparent.

The great role, for which we as a nation have been unconsciously reparing through all of the swift, full years of our history, is not revealed. The part calls for colossal strength, great wisdom, tolerance and hard, persistent work if we are to play it well and realize the destiny which our great past has made possible.

We have the necessary resources. We have the propitious geographical setting, the economic genius and the material development. Those who have gone before us have played their part well... but have we the Will, the Unity and the Vision to play this part as it must be played if the world is to go forward in its own development?

Each one of us alive in America
today is helping to give the momentous answer!

"I expected that you'd either be leading John through the art gallery or that you'd be sitting here in utter silence."

"You underestimate the privilege it is to me to be permitted to talk without being interrupted."

"I suppose so," Gay said, silent for a moment, then asked, "Have you told John, Dad?"

John saw David Graham's expression alter. The diffidence he had lost while he had talked of John's uncle returned. He glanced at John, almost, he thought, watching, in apology, then up at Gay, considering. "No," he said. "I haven't."

"It's about getting a place for you in the research department at Johns Hopkins," Gay said, eagerly. "That is what you want?" John heard the hesitancy in David Graham's voice, saw the considering expression in his eyes.

"I'd hoped that I might work and study there," he said slowly. "It's seemed pretty far in the future to make definite plans."

"There will be an opening for you the first of the year. I've been in communication with the authorities. Your training and ability will be investigated, of course, but that's largely a matter of course."

"Grandfather had an operation there," Gay's voice was excited and happy. "Considerate of him, wasn't it?"

John looked directly at David Graham.

"I appreciate what you've done," he said. "But I couldn't accept a place there the first of the year."

"Gay has told me—" David Graham's embarrassment visibly increased. "But I—we—she seemed to think that some arrangement might be made."

"Isn't it possible, John?"

"I'm afraid not." He saw a little of the brightness go out of her face but continued, "I've given Dr. Sargeant my promise to remain in Portland until October. You see, Mr. Graham, I'm discharging an obligation Dr. Sargeant made it possible for me to complete my medical course and that was the stipulation."

"But if it's only a question of money," Gay's color deepened and her eyes were very bright. "Couldn't you—" She paused at a warning glance from her father, looked down at her hand.

"It isn't merely, I've been working with Dr. Sargeant since October. He's leaving for a cruise the first of the year. There wouldn't be time to break in on her assistant even if—" "Even if you could swallow your—" She broke off, her eyes blazing, her chin held high.

"Gently, Gay," David Graham's face was very troubled. "This is a decision which John must make."

They were staring at each other like strangers. John thought, antagonism burning between them in vibrations across the dim, richly furnished room. But he could not, he would not yield. It was not, he told himself, entirely pride, not only stubbornness. There was a deeper reason, something he was unable to analyze fully. It had to do with all the other pressures being exerted upon him by this life into which he had been plunged.

"I'm sorry," he said, conscious of David Graham's eyes fixed upon him in compassion. "I can't break that promise, Gay. Dr. Sargeant is depending on me. I can't let him down."

There was silence for a moment. Then Gay's expression softened. She gave a low shaken laugh.

"I'm as bad as Aunt Flora," she said. "I've just been despising her because she very kindly offers to arrange your life for you. I'm doing the same." Her breath caught on a sob. "Forgive me. I'm sorry." She slipped from the arm of her father's chair and came toward him. "I'll be patient. I can wait."

He looked down at her as she stood beside him, lovely in this changed and softened mood.

"You do understand, Gay?" he asked, wanting to take her in his arms, to heal the hurt he had been obliged to give her in the only way at his command. Diffidence held him motionless, self-conscious in the presence of her father.

Her eyes fell away from his pleading glance. "Of course I understand," she laughed too quickly, too brightly. "It's just that Grandfather's offspring have always had too much of everything, I suppose. We don't accept disappointments gracefully. Except you, Dad. You're the only one of us who doesn't snatch and grab." She linked her arm through John's. "Have you finished with John?"

"I hope not," David Graham smiled but his eyes were grave. "I hope to have the pleasure of a prolonged acquaintance."

"At the moment, I mean. This house, swarming with relatives. No wonder we're all on edge. Will you excuse us, Dad? John and I are going out and walk five miles."

CHAPTER IX

The sun, dropping toward the horizon, laid a dazzling sheen on the snow, which covered the wide lawns sloping away from the gray stone towers and turrets and Victorian embellishments of the house, but when they entered the grove the glow was dimmed by the foliage of evergreens, striped and siligreed by the trunks and bare branches of trees. Rabbit tracks pointed the path before them, where, scalloped indentations, like waves on sand, where the snow had been blown by the wind. They ploughed through, kicking up a fine white mist that sprayed their faces with stinging cold.

"It's like a Maine snow," John said, as Gay became silent.

"Yes, isn't it?" she said brightly. "Dry and like powder. We don't often have them like this."

"Do you ski near here?" Why wouldn't she look at him? Her arm, linked through his, was unresponsive beneath the thick fur coat sleeve. When he glanced sideways and down, he saw only tendrils of red-brown hair curling out under her cap, the curving line of her cheek half-buried in fur. He had thought that here, alone, out of doors, he would find her again, but she had ignored or deliberately misinterpreted his diffident attempts to effect a reconciliation so that he no longer made an effort to break through the brittle gaiety of her mood.

"We have," she replied. "On the slope just beyond the grove, between the Janeway place and ours. It isn't very exciting though. Coasting there is mere fun."

"The Janeway place is beyond the grove?" John asked. Why should he apologize again? He asked himself. Gay had known that he was obligated to Dr. Sargeant until the coming October. She shouldn't have made plans for him which she knew he would be unable to endorse. She'd always been able to buy what she wanted. Well, in this instance, there was something more important than money. It was his services the doctor needed. Besides—

"Yes, 'Highcliff,'" Gay said in reply to his question. "It was a show-place until 'Dunedin' was built. Originally—I don't remember but I've seen photographs—people spoke of it as an Italian villa. It looked like a steel-engraving with terraces descending in a series to a lake and balustrades and urns and weeping conifers. Our family are parvenus in comparison with the Janeways. The land was granted to one of Todd's ancestors in 1630. That's why they can live simply now, without observing all the silly conventions that Aunt Flora struggles to maintain."

"We don't accept disappointments gracefully."

A hemlock branch, weighted with snow, cut across the path.

"Duck!" he cried and reached forward, too late, to thrust it aside.

He caught her as she stumbled. "Heaven!" she gasped and looked up at him, snow covering her face like a mask. She blinked, then laughed, a gay laugh, free from constraint. "You look like a snow-man," she said.

He blinked to clear his vision. "You look like a snow-maiden." He laughed with her. "No, that's too poetic. You look as though you'd fallen head-first in a barrel of soap flakes. I can't see anything but the tip of your nose. Here. Wait."

His arm held her while, with the other hand, he brushed the snow from her face. As he bent toward her, he saw the laughter dim in her eyes. A half-smile trembled across her lips.

"I've been—Can you forgive me?" "Oh, darling! Yes!" His arms held her but did not draw her toward him. "But," he said steadily, "you must understand."

"I do. I've been despising myself for—I'm hateful to you because I love you. That long stupid dinner and then Aunt Flora. I told you that we Grahams don't accept disappointments gracefully. It was a disappointment."

"But you knew I was obligated,"

She smiled ruefully. Her eyes were shy. "I wanted it so much," she said. "When I was away from you, I thought that when we were together again, you'd want it as much as I did, that being together would mean more to you than keeping a promise."

"I do want it. You know that, Gay."

"Yes, I know. But—"

"I could not love you, dear, so well. Loved I not honor more—"

"You're making fun of me."

"No, John, I'm not. Have I quoted correctly? Dad read the 'Idylls of the King' to me when I was little. I thought the king was very noble, but even then—" Humor shone fleetingly in the blue depths of her eyes, "—that it was a little hard on the queen."

"You make me feel—"

"I have great respect for your honor," she said steadily, "but I resent your lack of confidence. Oh, I don't blame you," she went on as he made a sound of protest. "Now that you've had a chance to look us over, you're probably justified. Mother is a dear, generous and amusing, but not very reliable, I suppose, and Aunt Flora and Uncle James—Isn't Uncle James ridiculous? And Muriel and Elsa and Dirk and Reggie Lancaster. Dad's the only one of us you could possibly admire—"

"I do admire him. You're like him—a little."

"You want to believe that, don't you? I am, a little, I guess. But I wouldn't be satisfied to shut myself off from life as he does. There's something of Mother in me and a great deal of Grandfather, but nothing of Aunt Flora," humor shone in her eyes again. "If that's encouraging as it should be."

He laughed reluctantly. Her face lifted to his, in the dimming glow of the sunset, was very grave.

"When we talked in Dad's study, you were thinking of your work."

"Yes," he admitted, disconcerted by her penetration.

"You are afraid for your work." She waited and then went on. "Don't you know I'll never interfere with that, that it will be my pleasure to help you? Not that I am a noble and self-sacrificing character but," her voice faltered. "But because—I love you."

"I love you." He caught her to him. Their lips met. But though she clung to him, though her cheek, cold and wet with snow, lay against his and she whispered soft endearments, he felt something lacking in the embrace. Each misunderstanding, each prolonged explanation blunted a little the sharp ecstasy they had felt at the cabin, when their lips met, when, her cheek against his she whispered soft endearments. She drew away from him and he made no effort to hold her. They walked on, breaking a path through the grove, closer now, but not united. When they spoke their voices were gentle, their glances meeting, separating, questioned but received no answer. They came out of the grove into the open again.

"That's the Janeway place."

John looked across the sloping expanse of snow to the white stone house which stood on a rise overlooking a series of terraces which descended to a small irregular lake. "Not the Italian villa," he said.

"Oh, no. Todd's father had the Patron's house moved up on the site of the original house."

"Patron?" he questioned, only vaguely familiar with the word.

"The ancestor to whom the land was granted," she explained but her voice was absent. "They're coasting," she said.

John's glance turned from the rambling stone house, washed over with faint pink light, standing serene among evergreens and the bare lofty branches of trees, toward the direction in which she was gazing. Figures in bright colored ski suits toiled up the slope which extended from the lake to the high wall planted with hemlocks which marked the boundary of the estate. As he watched, one of the figures raised an arm in greeting and a welcoming shout came ringing through the clear frosty air.

"There's Todd!" Gay's arm slipped from his. She took a few running steps forward. "Let's coast with them," she called back over her shoulder, then stopped and turned. "Shall we?" she asked, hesitatingly. "Would you enjoy it?"

"If you would," he replied, conscious of the constraint in his voice, "and I—we aren't intruding."

She returned to him, slipped her hand under his arm.

"Idiot!" she said. A half-mile curved her lips. Her eyes, lifted to his face, were very gentle. "John! Don't you know—?"

"Of course I know." He smiled, and saw her half-smile widen and deepen. "I'm rather good with a toboggan. Let's go coasting."

The sled sped down the runway glittering with a sheen that was faintly blue in cold moonlight.

"Hold tight!" Todd shouted back over his shoulder.

"I'm holding!" Gay tightened her grip around his waist. The words seemed to be torn from her lips and flung backward as the speed of the sled accelerated. Rushing cold stung her face and half closed her eyes. It was freedom, it was exciting.

"Here's the camel's hump!"

The sled rose and dipped. Gay laughed, gasping. She leaned out around Todd's back and looked ahead through squinting eyelids. The wall rose ahead of them, the dark hemlocks outlined in snow. She closed her eyes as Todd made the slithering turn. The sled tilted, spilling them off into the snow. They lay where they had fallen, laughing, gasping, struggling for breath. Todd scrambled up.

"All right?" he asked and pulled her to her feet.

"All right." He dropped her hands. She stood brushing the snow from her ski suit. "I've never gotten over the feeling that sometime we're going to crash into that wall again."

"Do you remember when we did?"

"I should. I still have the scar."

"It was your fault. You jerked the rope."

"It wasn't. You didn't make the turn in time."

They broke into laughter.

"I suppose we'll be arguing that question when we're eighty," Todd said. "Breath okay? Can you make the climb now?"

They started back in the soft snow at the side of the run. Todd pulled the sled. Gay linked her arm through his. Figures moved ahead of them, climbing the slope, pulling the toboggan. Other figures were dark against the fire blazing at the edge of the lake.

"Feeling better?" Todd asked, after an interval of silence.

"Better? What do you mean?"

"You didn't look too happy this afternoon, when you first came over."

"It's been an awful day. Aunt Flora—"

"I can imagine."

Current Building Trend Is Toward Small Home

There is every indication today that the swing toward the smaller, less expensive home is a permanent one, says the Plumbing and Heating Industries bureau. The preference today is for the compact type of servantless house, even among the income group which in former years built larger houses.

Paralleling the trend toward the small house incorporating the maximum compactness and convenience in its design and furnishings, is the steady progress made by the plumbing and heating industries in the development of space-saving features.

Radiators have been redesigned in modern slenderized lines and have lost 40 per cent of their bulk and size in the reducing process. Due to its handsome streamlined design, the new radiator looks smaller.

The factors have made it possible for heating contractors to design steam or hot-water heating plants with all essential parts such as radiators, boilers, and piping, considerably smaller than the sizes it was formerly necessary to use.

The advent of insulation, for instance, has decreased the heating load so that a smaller heating plant will do the work.

Kitchen Shower in Gay Matched Colors

By RUTH WYETH SPEARS

KITCHEN showers are fun for everyone and, while they are always supposed to be a surprise, the prospective bride will be wise to give out a broad hint as to her color scheme. The dearest wish of one bride-to-be was a kitchen in gay Mexican colors. Her friends had a wonderful time selecting everything from pottery to peeling knife handles in tones of green, orange and red. One gift that was appreciated most of all was the apron, curtain and tea towel set sketched here.

This set was made from muslin flour and sugar bags. Muslin by the yard would do just as well, and I have shown in the sketch how the gingham facings and bias tape trimming were applied to add the correct touch of color. If you have never cut an apron without a special pattern, you will find directions in Book 4 along with ideas for more aprons and other fascinating things to make; for almost nothing.

NOTE: As a service to our readers Mrs. Spears has prepared a series of homemaking booklets. Booklet 5 just published contains 32 pages of clever ideas fully illustrated; and a description of the other numbers in the series. Booklets are 10 cents each to cover cost and mailing. Send order to:

Easy-to-Make Slip Flatters the Figure

by Thornton W. Burgess

"Quack, quack, quack," said the ducks.
Farmer Brown's boy grinned. "I suppose if I could understand duck talk you would tell me all about what has happened, but seeing that I don't understand a word you say I suppose I have got to find out."
Once more he counted the ducks. "One is surely missing," said he. "Wonder if the foolish thing has wandered off somewhere. I'll have a look in the grass around the duck pond. Perhaps I'll find something there to tell me what has become of that missing quacker."

Off he strode to the duck pond, and Sammy and Chatterer could see him looking about in the grass. Then he looked this way and that way in the air. Of course he wasn't looking for a duck there. What he was looking for was to see if Red-tail the Hawk or any of Red-tail's relatives were anywhere in sight. Not a single member of the Hawk family was to be seen. Then Farmer Brown's boy began to study the ground. He was looking for tracks. Yes, sir, he was looking for tracks. He was looking for the footprints of Reddy or Granny Fox. He didn't find any, and once more he took off his hat and rubbed his head thoughtfully.

"I give it up," said he at last. "That duck has disappeared just the way my lunch did the day I went after berries in the Old Pasture and met Buster Bear."

Farmer Brown's boy spoke more truly than he guessed. Old Man Coyote could have told him just why it was that he missed one of his ducks that night.

Again It's Black

Favor for black has abated not a whit. The majority of the smart daytime frocks arriving for fall are exquisitely simple little models in black, either crepe or jersey or the now-so-fashionable faille silk. These place emphasis on sophisticated simplicity focusing attention on details such as the new side-drape fastenings. The gown pictured features this new gesture in the skirt which carries carefully controlled fullness over to one side of the front in a side-saddle fastening that preserves the straight slim silhouette.

The early call is for blacks and browns and rich greens in suit or ensembles. Hats are not freakish and they are styled to fit snugly and they are tuned to the type of hairdress you adopt.

Materials say quality at a glance. The dresses in the new collections are designed along simple wearable lines, glorified with fetching details that bespeak their newness.

And when all is said and done, you are going to be charmed with the new order of things in that good taste is evidenced all the way through heightened with dramatic touches of color in jewelry and gloves and other accessories that add fascination to the entire scheme of costume design for the coming months.

Ladylike Fashions Keynote for Fall

The new autumn style program places the emphasis on dignity and conservatism in dress. The majority of frocks arriving are simply fashioned carrying their style message through an entirely new silhouette that narrows skirts into easy natural lines, modifies shoulders in bodice, blouse and jackets, lengthens sleeves to below elbow or to wrist.

Easy-to-Make Slip Flatters the Figure

You can't just wear any old slip and expect your small-waisted frocks to have the smooth, suave, round-bosomed line they should have. Here's a design (1892-B) especially planned to do its part toward figure-flattery, and to fit as only a slip you make to your measure can fit. The top has bosom gathers to give you a little extra fullness. The waistline is dart-fitted so that it melts into your middle just beautifully.

These are simple details, very easy to do, but they make all the difference in the fit of your slip, and therefore in the fit of your frocks. There are seven easy steps in your detailed sew chart. Make yourself a whole wardrobe of slips like this, light and dark, of satin, lingerie crepe or taffeta, and some batistes and linsens for your coming cottons.

Barbara Bell Pattern No. 1892-B is designed for sizes 14, 16, 18, 20; 40 and 42. Corresponding bust measurements 32, 34, 36, 38, 40 and 42. Size 16 (34) requires 2 1/2 yards of 30-inch material without nap for built-up shoulders; 2 1/4 yards for strap style; 11 yards of shirred lace. Send order to:

Military Headgear From New Zealand

The picturesque headgear of the Australian and New Zealand soldiers is influencing much of the new military shown by London hat designers. These styles have high pinched crowns and wide brims. Some of the brims are simply flat and straight, while others turn up at one side and fasten under the chin with a military looking strap.

Weight of American Lobsters
Although the average weight of the matured American lobster is about two pounds, there are records of 13 of them that weighed more than 20 pounds each, one of which, the largest known, tipped the scales at 35 pounds. It was caught off Atlantic Highlands, N. J., in 1897, and is on exhibition in the American Museum of Natural History in New York city.

Japanese Use English Words
Among the many English words that have entered the Japanese vocabulary and remained almost intact is "dilemma." Japanese believe it is a native word, having forgotten the original—"dilemma."

Household News

By Eleanor Howe

Even on the stickiest, hottest summer day, a good tart, icy drink will refresh you. Fruit drinks, in particular, are good; when you drink a frosty tumbler of lemonade or chilled orange juice, you not only feel cooler, you are cooler. Fresh fruit drinks actually ward off the heat of summer.

Fruit beverages provide the minerals and vitamins the body requires, and, because of the sugar added for sweetening, are fairly high in food energy.

It's very easy to serve "soda fountain specials" at home. Any combination of fruit juices makes a delightful and refreshing beverage—provided some of the more tart juices, such as those from lemons, slightly sour oranges, or rhubarb—are used to keep the beverage from tasting too sweet and flat. Use slices of orange or lemon, mint leaves, whole, fresh or canned cherries or berries, for garnishing. Ice cubes for chilling fruit drinks or iced tea might be frozen from orange or lemon juice, to avoid diluting the beverage. Mint leaves, bits of lemon peel or cherries can be frozen into the cubes. For iced coffee, pour some of the coffee into the freezing tray of your refrigerator, and freeze. Then use the coffee cubes for chilling the drink. This will prevent the coffee from becoming diluted and losing its strength as the ice melts.

Sugar syrup, used for sweetening, is easily mixed throughout the whole drink, and makes a smoother tasting, smoother textured drink, than when unmelted sugar has been added. To make the sugar syrup, boil 4 cups of sugar with 4 cups of water, for 10 minutes. Pour into clean, hot jars, and seal. Store in refrigerator, and use as needed.

Serve crisp cookies or dainty sandwiches with iced drinks for simple afternoon or evening refreshments.

Lemonade. Follow these three rules if you want to make perfect lemonade: Use fresh lemon juice and plenty of it; sweeten to the taste of each—not too much sweetening for folks who like it sour—sweeter for those with a sweet tooth; use ice and more ice. For each person served, allow:

- 1 lemon
- 1 to 2 tablespoons sugar or honey
- 1 cup cold water
- Ice

Extract lemon juice. Add sugar or honey to taste. Stir to dissolve. Add water. Serve over ice in large glasses. Garnish with lemon slice on rim of glass. To make lemon fizz, make lemonade with carbonated water.

Chocolate Chip Ice Cream.

(Makes 1 gallon)

- 1 cup sugar
- ½ cup flour
- 2 quarts milk (scalded)
- 4 eggs (separated)
- 4 teaspoons vanilla
- ½ teaspoon salt
- 2 cups semi-sweet chocolate (cut in bits)

Combine sugar and flour, and add scalded milk slowly. Then cook over low heat, stirring constantly. Remove from heat. Beat egg yolks, and blend with ½ cup of the hot mixture, then add to the custard, together with vanilla and salt. Chill. Pour into the freezing compartment of ice cream freezer. Pour in the stiffly beaten egg whites, assemble the freezer, and cover. Pack with mixture of three parts crushed ice to one part rock salt. Freeze, until turning becomes difficult. Remove dasher, fold in chocolate, and pack down the cream with a spoon. Cover, and allow to ripen for one hour before serving.

Sugar Cookies.

- ¾ cup butter
 - ½ cup granulated sugar
 - 1 egg, well beaten
 - 1½ cups pastry flour
 - 1 teaspoon baking powder
 - ¼ teaspoon salt
 - 1 teaspoon vanilla extract
- Cream butter, add sugar and egg. Sift dry ingredients and add with the extracts. Flour and sugar the board and roll the cookies on it. Dust heavily with sugar, roll it in a little, cut in cookie shapes, and bake in a moderate oven (350 degrees) 10 to 12 minutes.

Pineapple Raspberry Punch.

(Serves 25)

- 6 cups crushed pineapple
 - 6 cups raspberry juice
 - 3 quarts gingerale
 - Crushed ice
- Mix crushed pineapple and the raspberry juice thoroughly. Just before serving, add gingerale and some ice.

Iced Coffee. Make coffee a little stronger than usual. Cool, and serve in tall glasses filled with cracked ice. Top with whipped cream. If desired, cream may be poured on the ice before the coffee is added.

Iced Tea. Rinse teapot with boiling water. Place tea in pot, allowing one teaspoon of the tea per cup. Pour freshly boiling water over the tea leaves and allow to steep, not boil, for 3 to 5 minutes. Pour tea over chilled ice, to cool it quickly. Serve in tall glasses garnished with lemon slices and sprigs of mint. (Released by Western Newspaper Union.)

Long Gloves

In this picture below-the-elbow sleeves and long gloves meet in just the right spot to look fashion-correct. These American-made slippers of velvety soft mocha make a dramatic contrast to the natural Russian lynx jacket. While the gloves' extra length and their exquisite finish give them an extravagant air, the fact that they are American made means long wear and washability, thus keeping them in the practical class.

A Good Thought

"A good thought," says an old writer, "is a great boon, for which God is to be first thanked, then he who was the first to utter it, and then in a lesser, but still in a considerable degree, the man or woman who was the first to quote it to us."

GOOD COUNSEL FOR HAPPY LIVING

To awaken each morning with a smile brightening my face; to greet the day with reverence for the opportunities it contains; to approach my work with a clean mind; to hold ever before me, even in the doing of little things, the Ultimate Purpose toward which I am working; to meet men and women with laughter on my lips and love in my heart; to be gentle, kind, and courteous; to approach night with weariness that woos sleep and joy that comes from work well done—this way I desire to waste wisely my days.

DALE--FARNSWORTH

The Old Walpole Meeting House (1772) at Christmas Cove was the setting Saturday afternoon for the marriage of Miss Suzanne Sutphen Farnsworth, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. George Bourne Farnsworth, formerly of Boston and Cleveland, to Neal Waldo Dale, son of Alfred Richard Dale and the late Mrs. Dale of St. Augustine, Fla. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Charles C. Sewall, formerly of Rye, N. Y., and read from the ministerial handbook of the bride's late grandfather, Dr. Paul Frederick Sutphen of Cleveland.

The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, wore her great grandmother's wedding gown, of deep ivory satin, off the shoulders with long sleeves, a light basque with full skirt and lace panels. The veil of the same shade of tulle fell from a lace coronet caught with orange blossoms and she carried a bouquet of green orchids.

Her sister, Mrs. Vollmer W. Fries of Larchmont, N. Y., was matron of honor. The bridesmaids were Miss Grace Collins of Cleveland, Miss Helen Roosevelt of New York and Miss Jean Coggan of Englewood, N. J.; the junior bridesmaid was the bride's niece, Carole Fries. The matron of honor wore pale blue marquisette with close-fitting bodice, short puffed sleeves, sweetheart neckline and a full skirt. Her head bandeau was of matching ribbon and flowers, with long streamers, and she carried a bouquet of rubrum lilies and delphinium.

The bridesmaids wore similar frocks of pale yellow, with head bandeaux of the same shade and carried bouquets of African daisies and delphinium. The junior bridesmaid wore a poke bonnet and a frock like her mother's and carried an old fashioned bouquet.

Vollmer W. Fries was best man. The ushers were Joseph Walworth Sutphen 4th of Los Angeles, Warren Wick and William Warner of Cleveland, R. Channing Barlow of Scarsdale, N. Y., Rockwood W. Bullard Jr. of Detroit and Scott P. Garfield of Utica.

The Meeting House, with its lofty pulpit and ancient square pews, was lighted by candles, and decorated with Cibotium ferns and white gladioli.

A reception was held at the Farnsworths' northern home, "Harbor Hill," receiving in the garden with the bridal party were the bride's father and mother, the latter attired in a blue lace gown and a dusty pink transparent hat trimmed with blue and pink roses, wearing a corsage of orchids; and the bridegroom's father and stepmother, the latter wearing dusty rose marquisette with Chantilly lace panels, a pale blue hat, matching accessories, and a corsage of orchids.

The bridal table of thirty was laid with pale blue crepe cloth with inserts of lace, lighted by tall white candles; the tiered wedding cake in the center of the table was surrounded by a wreath of white roses and bouvardia.

The bride graduated from Miss Porter's School at Farmington, Conn., attended Rollins College and is a member of the Miami Junior League.

Mr. Dale was graduated from the University of Florida and from the University of Florida College of Law. He is a member of Phi Alpha Delta.

"THE BEST BREAD IN MAINE"

"Oxford County Families Are Fussy!"

This is the remark of an Oxford County grocer in explaining the big GAIN in the sales of Golden Heart Bread in his store.

"Yes, the women hereabouts are mighty fussy. They want GOOD food, and particularly GOOD BREAD. I find that Golden Heart Bread makes more NEW friends than any other kind, at the same time keeping its regular users. I often ask women why they specify Golden Heart Bread and invariably they say: 'Because it's just like my own.' ... And that's why Fussy Families Here and Elsewhere, INSIST upon
